On Friday

Fawn Hall has been approached by a prominent Hollywood agent who wants to do her story. Bud Moss, who once met with another Washington secretary, Elizabeth Ray, has had several sessions with Fawn and her attorney, Plato Cacheris.

Fawn handled herself so well during the Iran hearings that one network news exec is talking about offering her the job of anchorwoman. Anything to boost ratings in TV land. Fawn will only say, "We've had tons of offers, but right now I'm just working at the Pentagon, trying to get a paycheck."

As to the current issue of the National Enquirer, which reports that she's been meeting secretly with actress Farrah Fawcett, Fawn says, "I've never even met her."

Donna Rice, Gary Hart's pal, isn't doing as well. There's talk around the corridors of the William Morris Agency in Beverly Hills that Donna was turned down for representation by the talent agency prior to agent Norman Brokaw signing Gary Hart. It was Mr. Brokaw who created megabucks and superstar images for Bill Cosby, Olympic swimmer Mark Spitz, Gerald Ford, Alexander Haig and Don Regan.

Donna, by the way, is attempting to peddle her story to news organizations for six figures. So far, no takers, despite the fact that she has Hollywood friends in very visible places.

It was Olympic star Bruce Jenner who was responsible for her introduction to Barbara Walters, which led to her interview on "20/20." And it was actor Warren Beatty who was the connecting link between Donna and Gary Hart, Donald Sopher of Pittsburgh who owns Turnberry Isle where Donna lives in Miami, and Saudi armist Adnan Khashoggi, her one-time playmate, who insiders say foots the tab for the condo. Donna's pals say she's bitter that friend Lynn Armandt has already earned $400,000 on Donna's story, while Donna herself has received merely $4,000 from Life magazine.

Lally Weymouth apparently is getting along better with her mom, OP publisher Kay Graham. She's tossing a 70th birthday bash Saturday for Kay. That's a surprise to many because just a few weeks ago, Lally was noticeably absent from the gathering of family and friends when Kay received an award in New York City.

When Mark Thatcher, son of the British prime minister, married his new Dallas bride, Diane Burgdorf, he promised her she'd mingle with royalty. Much to the surprise of the newlyweds, after a royal shopping spree in Dallas, the couple received a royal rejection when they were barred from the royal enclosure at Royal Ascot, Britain's racing event of the year. The couple hasn't exactly received a royal welcome in Dallas society either.

Another political marriage is on the rocks. Jim Blanchard, the former congressman and now Michigan governor, and his wife, Paula, are divorcing after 21 years of marriage. Paula filed for divorce, citing irreconcilable differences for their "mutal decision." They'll share custody of their 16-year-old son.

Potomac fever must have struck David Bowen, the former congressman from Mississippi. Tired of waiting for the state's senior senator, John Stennis, to retire so he could run for the seat, David opted to return to Washington sans Senate seat. He's lobbying for the state's university system. David had been teaching political science at the University of Mississippi for the past two years.

Frank Sinatra's press agent, Lee Solters, says he had one meeting with Gary Hart about repairing his image, but isn't working for the former candidate. Lee says he has been approached by another presidential hopeful, but no deal has been signed.

Gary's pal, attorney Bill Broadhurst, is still around town. He joined fellow Louisianan Al Copeland, Rep. Lindy Boggs and Sens. Paul Trible, John Breaux and John Warner at the opening of Copeland New Cajun Restaurant in Alexandria the other evening.
